THE WAR IN ITALY.

The battle of Montabello searcely admits of description. It was series of dreadful deeds of daring, hand to hand fights, of sanguinary seconders, of desperite charges and assaults. The shells and bullets of the Austrians burst so thickly among low recopy, and to receive, already engaged, was obliged to fall back on the right of our lines, retiring from Montebello, protected by a ravine filled with brushwood, which descended towards the main road of Veghera. As General Educated on his men, to support our centre, it was observed that a body of the of the enemy had gained the top of a hilly ground behind the French division on our right. A deadly volley was poured into them, and, protected by the first, both Fishmonters and French came out of the ravine and went boddly to meet the enemy. The effect of the new French guns, carrying their bullets to a distance of more than two English miles was so great that the center of the Austrians was soon obliged to fall back upon his reserve, and Montebello, was again occupied by our men. By this time the third and fourth brigades of General Force's division had reached the seene of action. This distinguished officer had left in support of a small bland of the national guard—who, by the bye, fought bravely—his first brigade, sending an orderly officer of his staff to Marshal Baraguay d'Hilliers, whing support if need be.

support if need be.

Having thus given his orders, he came on with his Zonives at the pas de charge. One hatalion of Chasseurs d'Orieans rushed by, the "light of battle on their faces." It was seconpanied by two batalions of the line commanded by Ducheff and Lacrevelle. The shock was terrible; Lacretelle feli dead from his horse, Major Duchef fell dead after him; our men still advanced a la bayonette. An Austrian Colouel and own Creats were made urisoners. Assailed in vanced a la bayonette. An Austrian Colouel and 200 Croats were made prisoners. Assailed in front by the French, broken by the impetuosity of the charge of the Sardinian Monferrato light horsemen, led by the brave Colouel Morell; at-tacked on the right by the Second brigade, and by our artiflery all sloug the line, the Austrians began to retire after a struggle of six hours. At five o'clock they were driven pell mell down the nills towards Stradella on one side, and towards Casatisma on the other. I was the side, and towards chind them.

We had won the day. The Austrians were therefore unable to force our positions, though therefore unable to force our positions, though they were 15,000 strong, with a powerful artil-lery, this cumumberiog as by 6,000 men. Fo-rey's division numbered scarcely 8,000 fighting men, and was supported by 980 Sardinian horses. You must not forget that this brave cavalry, led by young Colonel De Sonnez, sus-tained for an hour the first shock of the enemy, thus giving time to the French to come up.

thus giving time to the French to come up.

Let English Views of the Battle.

The London Times of May 23d says:

"The Austrians evidently fought well, for they must have carried the town of Casteggio, which had been occupied by the French and barricaded, before they could have arrived at the village of Montebello, from whence they were eventually driven. The Austrians seem to have been in the first instance successful, and only to have been driven back when the French supports came up."

The Times disparages the battle of Montebello, calling it a tenth rate victory. It says that the war will involve a constant drain of men and money, with pitched battles and long sieges, and this is perhaps what it will not long sendare.

and this is pernaps what it will file long adure.

The Times does not allude to the Emperor Napoleon's views respecting the independence of Italy, but accuses him of having sold himself to the demon of military conquest.

(From the London Post, May 28.)

It is evident that this engagement, though the Austrians for the moment appear rather in the character of assailants, has been the result of the change in the position of the French 1st and; and army corps, which had pushed on as far as Toriona—indeed, even further—clearly with the view of intercenting the Austrian retreet to Piaview of intercenting the Austrian retreet to Piaview.

Tortona—indeed, even further—clearly with the view of intercepting the Austrian retreat to Pin-ceuss or to Lombardy. Whether voluntary or forced, the attack last Friday on Casteggio shows the advantage of the course pursued by the Allies—an advantage still greater if, as may be fairly presumed, it hastened the Austrian retreat.

Though it would be absurd to form any conclusion about the relative chances of success from the cautious movements and patient strategy of the hostile armies, it has already transpired that a considerable difference of opinion that is the catire than the catir spired that a considerable difference of opinion had a sixed at Vienna respecting the entire plan of the campaign. It is stated that on the very day of this engagement the Emperor Faucia Joseph arrived at Mian, and left immediately for Pavia, attended by General Heas. The previous movements of the Austrian army are believed not to have the Austrian army are believed not to have the Austrian approval of the veteran strategistarby far the greatest tactician in the Austrian service, and the general to whose arrangements the speedy and successful termination of the Empairs of 1847 has been commonly ascribed. Should Count Grula find himself practically superse-and successful termination of the campaign of 1849 has been commonly accribed. Should Count Gyulai find himself practically apperseded in the command by this far abler and more experienced officer, we may anticipate on the part of Austria all the wariness of a Fabian policy. General Heas is not the man to risk the fate of his master's empire on a single battle; it is far more probable that we shall see the army of Francis Joseph falling back and taking up the cld, well-known and formidable position between Verona, Mantan and Peschiera.

TERM, May 22, 1859.—General Clidini, wishing to take possession of the end of the bridge of Vercelli, which adjoined the left bank of the river, in order by that means to protect the construction of another bridge over the Sesia, moved forward two columns, which, after having passed the river, foined at the same point the columns which crossed near Sesia, on the side next Alblino, was attacked by the Austrians in great force, and sustained affered conflict at a place called Villats. side next Albino, was attacked by the Austrians in great, force, and sustained a shere's conflict at a place called Villata. The enemy was, however, routed, and our troops established themselves in Borgo Vercelli; the other column crossed the Sesia near Cappucint Vecchi, and after having surprised two companies of the enemies, remained at that place. Our loss is inequificant, but that of the Austrians is considerable. The Modenese, after having applied their cannon, ovacanted Pulla last night, and retreated to Giriszino.

When we were nearly all in our carriages, ready to start of our invention excursion, our host, Gen. Childs, inquired where we were going. Some one answered, "to the Cemelery."

"Ah," said the General, with a gravity that brought down the crowd, "that's the last place I want to go to."

On our return, just as the sun was going

On our return, just as the sun was going flown, he met us at the door and inquired for the places we had visited. As soon as the names were mentioned, addressing the Vice-President, said he, "John! that's too bad. You sught to have taken them to the fair grounds, and several other places, a great deal better than mysthing they have seen!" "Now, General," was the amiling reply, "that's a sly way you have of bragging of our place to atrangers, when know they have no time for further visits," and all joined in merriment that followed. To us the apparent imperfinence of addressing the Vice President, as "John." was converted into a pleasant sally, as we looked in the mischierous face of our host, with his head frested all over, and standing near seven feet in his shoes, with proportions in all respects to match. It was a first illustration of the republican simplicity which our free institutions. blican simplicity which our free institution erish. For his great courtesy and politeners. The Po presents a very singular spectacle-the vegetable earth and the sand brought down by the torrents which come down from the mountains constantly fill up its bed, and thus threaten the surrounding country with incundation. In order to guard against that damper, the people on the buths have everywhere raised embankments, which are increased as the river rises, so that in some places the waters of the Po run as high as the tops of the neighboring steeples. It is everywhere bordered by lateral canals, and the water which filters through the embankments renders the country very near marshy.
